

NORTH BOUNDARY

Jasper's most remote corner is the domain of adventurous backcountry hikers following an epic multiday trek all the way to Mt Robson in British Columbia.

MIETTE HOT SPRINGS

The springs are a starting point for various trails, most notably the hugely rewarding and spectacular Sulphur Skyline and the more protracted Fiddle River Trail, which plunges quickly into backcountry.

PYRAMID BENCH

The low tree-covered plateau that rises directly above Jasper Town is filled with meandering trails good for hikes, bikes and horseback riding. Look out for wildlife around the many small lakes and ponds.

ATHABASCA RIVER VALLEY

Enjoy flat, easy trails, accessible on foot from Jasper Town, beside glacial lakes, rocky knolls and the swirling currents of the Athabasca River.

MALIGNE LAKE

Short loops on the lake's north shore, steep hikes to viewpoints in the surrounding hills, and the start point for the backcountry Skyline Trail.

ICEFIELDS PARKWAY

Long and short hikes lead off Jasper's arterial road – some are little more than strolls to waterfalls and lakes, others pierce the remote, glacier-covered backcountry.

TONQUIN VALLEY

A roadless wilderness, with campgrounds and two backcountry lodges, that is revered by summer hikers and horseback riders, as well as winter cross-country skiers.

MT EDITH CAVELL

Although the peak itself is best left to mountaineers, you can enjoy its foothills with a walk to a hanging glacier, or a stroll through Jasper's finest alpine meadows. The area is also used as an access point to the wild Tonquin Valley.
