It's been burned, bombed, rebuilt, buttressed by the Berlin Wall, wrapped in fabric and finally turned into the modern home of the German parliament. Its most eye-catching feature is the glistening glass dome, which draws more than three million visitors each year (so head here early to beat the crowds). A lift whisks you to the rooftop terrace which offers a great view across Berlin. (Platzder Republik!, 'UB undestage')

Auring the Cold War, the landmark prandenburger Tor (Brandenburg Gate) now epitomises German reunification and often serves as a photogenic backdrop for festivals, concerts and New Year's Eve parties. It stands sentinel over Pariser Platz, a harmoniously proportioned square framed by banks as well as the US, British and French embassies. A masterpiece of organic architecture, Hans Scharoun's 1963 honey-coloured concert venue is the home base of the prestigious Berliner Philharmoniker, which will be led by Sir Simon Rattle until 2018. The auditorium feels like the inside of a finely crafted instrument and boasts supreme acoustics and excellent sightlines from every seat, thanks to the clever terraced vineyard design, not a bad seat in the house.
