Why Go?

The seemingly endless fertile grasslands that make up the pampas financed Argentina's golden years over a century ago, and the area is still the nation's economic powerhouse, producing most of Argentina's famous beef.

These humble pampas are often overlooked by travelers, but there are hidden gems here and there. A visit to lovely San Antonio de Areco offers a taste of living gaucho culture, while the picturesque hills around Tandil and Sierra de la Ventana offer plenty of opportunities for outdoor recreation. And the Atlantic coast's bustling beaches make a great escape from Buenos Aires' summer heat.

You can also spend a few days in one of the region's many historic estancias (ranches), where the huge sky and faded elegance of Argentina's past can all be experienced firsthand.

When to Go

Mar del Plata

Jan–Feb Summer means great weather for the beach resorts, though prices and crowds skyrocket.

Oct–Nov & Mar–Apr Spring and fall are fine times to explore Tandil and Sierra de la Ventana.

Early Nov The gaucho celebration Día de la Tradición takes place in San Antonio de Areco.

NORTHERN PAMPAS

The pampas is both a general term for a large geographic region of fertile plains and the name of the province that lies to the west of Buenos Aires. The pampas grasslands roll southwards from the Río de la Plata to the banks of the Río Negro, stretching west towards the Andes and all the way up to the southern parts of Córdoba and Santa Fe provinces, taking in the entire Buenos Aires and La Pampa provinces.

The rich soil and lush natural grasses of the northern pampas make it Argentina's best cattle-raising country. The region yields plentiful hides, beef, wool and wheat for global markets, stamping Argentina on the world's economic map.

From the mid-19th century the province of Buenos Aires was the undisputed political and economic center of the country. When the city of Buenos Aires became Argentina's capital, the province submitted to national
