Giverny (p276)

Art and/or garden lovers shouldn't miss Giverny's maison et jardins de Claude Monet, the former home and flower-filled gardens of the impressionist master.

Louis XIV transformed his father's hunting lodge into the monumental Château de Versailles in the mid-17th century, and it remains France's most famous, grandest palace. Situated 22km southwest of Paris, the baroque château was the kingdom's political capital and the seat of the royal court from 1682 until the French Revolution in 1789.

Intending the château to house his court of 6000 people, Louis XIV hired four talented men to take on the gargantuan task: architect Louis Le Vau; Jules Hardouin-Mansart, who took over from Le Vau in the mid-1670s; painter and interior designer Charles Le Brun; and landscape designer André Le Nôtre, under whom entire hills were flattened, marshes drained and forests moved to create the seemingly endless gardens, ponds and fountains for which Versailles is so well known. It has been on Unesco's World Heritage list since 1979.

Sprawling over 900 hectares, the estate is divided into four main sections: the 580m-long palace; the gardens, canals and pools to the west of the palace; two smaller palaces, the Grand Trianon and the Petit Trianon, to the northwest; and the Hameau de la Reine (Queen's Hamlet) north of the Petit Trianon. Tickets include an English-language audioguide; free apps can be downloaded from the website.

Versailles is easy to reach from Paris. The most convenient option is to take RER C5 (€4.20, 40 minutes, frequent), which goes from Paris' Left Bank RER stations to Versailles-Château–Rive Gauche station. There are also other rail connections, buses and organised tours.
