Hóngkǒu & North Shànghǎi

Neighbourhood Top Five

• Get history-hunting at the Ohel Moishe Synagogue (p159) and delve down surrounding streets for flavours of Jewish Shànghǎi.

2 Track down Hóngkŏu's concession-period and art deco architecture (p160).

3 Get lost along the labyrinth of concrete walkways in cool 1933 (p158).

• Poke among the bric-abrac of Dàshànghǎi (p162) and other shops along Duolun Rd. 6 Raise a glass to the Bund and the Pǔdōng sky-line from Vue (p162), a bar with a view.

For more detail of this area see Map p314

Explore: Hóngkǒu & North Shànghǎi

Hóngköu and North Shànghǎi (虹口区、北上海) may not have the lion's share of sights in town, but prize chunks of heritage architecture rise up from the swirl of street life and an authentic grittiness survives.

The up-and-coming North Bund area beyond Sūzhōu Creek is worth exploring for its impressive buildings – including the granddaddy of heritage hotels, the Astor House Hotel – looming art deco blocks and noteworthy concession-era classics. The American Settlement was originally here, merging with the British Settlement in 1863 to form the prosperous International Settlement. To the west, Zháběi became infamous for its sweatshops and factories and was later flattened by the Japanese in 1932.

A rich vein of Jewish heritage survives towards Yángpǔ in the east, dating from the days when Hóngkǒu was home to thousands of Jewish refugees, mostly from Germany, who transformed 'Little Tokyo' (where 30,000 Japanese lived) into 'Little Vienna'. The Ohel Moishe Synagogue stands as a testament to this era. Wander round this neighbourhood and you'll also find examples of Shànghǎi's trademark terrace-style shikùmén (stonegate house) architecture, lòngtáng (alleyway) houses and narrow alleyways filling in the gaps.

Close to the Bund, Hóngkŏu has some well positioned accommodation options and while notable restaurants may seem thin on the ground, work your shoe leather and you can find excellent options from across China.

Local Life

 Snacking Join locals along North Jiangxi Rd (p161) for a profusion of local titbits and hunger-busting bites.
Hóngkǒu backstreets Wander the lanes around the Ohel Moishe Synagogue to soak up the local 'Little Vienna' flavour (p158).

→Park life Catch the locals performing taichi or honing ballroom-dancing spins in Lu Xun Park (p160).

→ Shopping Sift for bargain threads with throngs of shoppers at Qīpŭ Market (p162).

Getting There & Away

→ Metro Line 10 runs north from East Nanjing Rd to Fùdàn University, passing Tiantong Rd, North Sichuan Rd and Hailun Rd stations. Line 3 also runs north, offering access to Duolun Rd and Lu Xun Park. Lines 4 and 8 loop east-west. Main interchange stations are Baoshan Rd (lines 3 and 4), Hailun Rd (lines 4 and 10) and Hongkou Football Stadium (lines 3 and 8).

→Bus Nos 22, 37 and 135 run up Dongdaming Rd and back down Changyang and Dongchangzhi Rds.

Lonely Planet's Top Tip

Basing yourself in south Hóngkŏu – at the Astor House Hotel (p212), Chai Living Residences (p212) or the soon-to-open Bulgari – allows you to hang your Shànghǎi fedora within easy reach of the Bund across Wàibáidù Bridge (Garden Bridge) and the nearby concession architecture of the North Bund district.

X Best Places to Eat

- Guòyúan (p161)
- Noodle Bull (p161)
- Xīndàlù (p161)
- Yang's Fry Dumplings (p161)

For reviews, see p161.

Best Shopping

- Qīpǔ Market (p162)
- Dàshànghǎi (p162)
- Details Gallery (p162)
- Duolun Rd (p158)

For reviews, see p162.