Explore: Vasilyevsky Island

Peter the Great originally intended this large triangular island to be the heart of his city. As such, it is among the oldest neighbourhoods in St Petersburg, especially the eastern tip known as the Strelka ('tongue of land'), which is crammed with institutions, museums and the sprawling campus of St Petersburg State University.

Further back from the Strelka, the island is an orderly, residential place, with a grid-system of wide roads full of shops, restaurants and cafes. It makes a great base for travellers, with fast connections to the centre, and plenty to do locally in the evenings.

The northern and western end of the island is rather postindustrial and remote, with the city's ferry port and the LenExpo exhibition centre blighting the landscape. However, in the past few years regeneration has come, with the fantastic new Erarta Museum of Contemporary Art well and truly putting the area on the map for more inquisitive travellers.

Local Life

➔ Cool Street Hang with the locals on 6-ya and 7-ya liniya, the main pedestrian and commercial street of Vasilyevsky Island. Full of cafes, bars, restaurants and shops, this is where to escape the tourist crowds at the Strelka.

➔ Bridge Advice If you're staying on Vasilyevsky Island, remember that in the summer months the bridges go up at night and you can't cross. Dvortsovyy most stays up all night (1.25am to 4.50am), but Blagoveshchensky most has a short break and is down from 2.45am until 3.10am.

Getting There & Away

➔ Metro Vasilyevsky Island is served by two metro stations, both on Line 3. By far the most useful is Vasileostrovskaya, at the island's heart, while Primorskaya serves the far-flung northwestern corner of the island.

➔ Bus The number 7 bus goes between Primorskaya to pl Vosstaniya, via Nalichnaya ul, all of Bolshoy pr and Nevsky pr. Trolleybus 10 and 11 run similar routes.

➔ Marshrutka From Vasileostrovskaya metro station, the following marshrutky zip to the far end of Sredny pr: K30, K44, K62, K120, K128, K237, K690.

Lonely Planet's Top Tip

This tip might sound slightly nuts, but trust us. If you're heading to Vasileostrovskaya metro station from the city centre at any time during rush hour, be sure to get on the very last carriage (ie the one at the back end of the train), as this is nearest to the escalator when you arrive at the station. The platform at this very busy station is always swamped with people and you'll have to wait for minutes before being able to get on the escalator unless you use this sneaky trick.
