Why Go?

Turkey's sparkling Aegean coast boasts 4000 years of civilisation – and it's got the ruins to prove it, the most famous being ancient sites such as Ephesus, Priene, Miletus and Didyma, where excavations continue to yield astonishing new treasures every year.

In summer, the coast's population swells as millions of foreign and Turkish tourists descend on Marmaris, Kuşadası and, especially, Bodrum, the most glamorous of all Anatolia's seaside getaways. Yet despite the nonstop partying, this white-washed town beneath a castle somehow preserves a unique air of refinement, while new boutique hotels and elegant eateries keep springing up, both here and in the exclusive (but easily visited) coastal villages of the Bodrum Peninsula.

Nevertheless, all of the commotion aside, it's still possible to experience the elemental pleasures of rugged terrain, village life and spectacular Aegean views on the more remote Bozburun and Datça Peninsulas. The coast is most peaceful in spring or autumn (when prices drop, too).
